Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Clara Novello's Reminiscences: Compiled by the Daughter Contessa Valeria Gigliucci, With a Memoir Clara Anastasia Novello was born in England, June 10, 1818, and died at Rome, March 12, 1908. At the early age of eleven she became a pupil at the Institution Royale de Musique classique et religieuse in Paris, of which Choron was the director. But before that time, her father - a gifted musician - had accustomed her to sing Handel's and Mozart's music, whilst still holding her doll in her arms, so that on the trial day, the French examiners found that the English child was a very exceptional student, and abnormally gifted with a silvery, bell-like, clear and ringing voice, which, after studious cultivation, became a fixture and a life-long possession. The Revolution of 1830 prematurely shortened the studies in Paris, and Clara, before her teens, returned home and appeared in public a year or two afterwards. Her first appearance was at a concert in the Windsor theatre, where the King's private band gratuitously assisted for...
