POISONS--STOMACH STAGGEES. 51. GASTBITIS. Gastritis, or inflammation of the stomach, is a rare disease in the horse, and when it does occur it is most frequently produced by poison: it now and then, however, appears as a natural disease. Its usual symptoms are a dull, heavy appearance, loss of appetite, hot mouth, swollen eyelids, abdomen enlarged, bowels rather costive, pulse oppressed and ranging from fifty to sixty. This stage is sometimes followed by one of excitement, in which the pulse is increased in frequency, and the febrile symptoms are more marked; and this stage may be again succeeded by stupefaction. There is not the acute agony of inflammation of the bowels, but it is evident that there is a constant pain of a more subdued character. The disease may be produced by anything that disturbs the digestive functions, and it is attended with considerable danger. The Treatment must consist of copious blood-letting, oily laxatives, injections, plenty of diluents, such as linseed tea, and stimulating externally the region of the stomach, and afterwards administering vegetable tonics. poisons.--If there is reason to suspect that the animal has had poison administered, we must endeavour to ascertain the nature of the poison, and apply without delay the best antidote. If arsenic has been taken, lime-water and mucilaginous liquids, in large quantities, should be given, and bleeding avoided, as being calculated to encourage absorption; but endeavours should be made to...
